Bourke Cockran's Speech.

Bourke Cochran made the greatest speech of his life in the House on Saturday evening in support of the Wilson bill. He excelled his silver-repeal speech as much as that excelled his former speeches in Congress. It was enthusiastically received by the democrats and by the large majority of the people in the crowded galleries. All You would be willing to pay its good points were applauded, and when he got through the democrats and the people in the galleries clapped a slow one, provided the work and cheered for fully ten minutes while was equally good, wouldn't MrCockran was almost mobbed with conyou? What do you say, then, to our proposition to do your work, not only quicker, but for House, so that the next speaker on the work, not only quicker, but for less money? Nobody could It was a remarkable demonstration,

His speech was not "mere sound and fury, signifying nothing," but was as 50 cents | logical as a Darwinian treatise on the 75 cents | survival of the fittest. He stated the case of the protectionists as fairly as Burrows orMcKinleyccu'd, and then proceeded n cloquent logic o destroy it. So far as a speech may, Bourke Cockran's speech marked the beginning of an era. It marks a milestone on the pathway of "economic emancipation," to use his own phrase. His plea for freer trade will stand before the American people much as Webster's great speech for Union has stood through two generations. It was an epoch-making speech Mr. Cockran said if he believed that this bill would reduce the revenue he would not support it. He believed, on the contrary, that rhe revenues would be increased by decreasing the tarif. and his belief was based on the experi-ence of all the civilized nations of the world. The reduction of the tariff consumption, enlarge our markets, and would not only increase the revenues of the government, but would also increase the opportunities of the people to earn the money they need for exist-The chief trouble would be the question of how to dispose of the sur-plus which would accumulate. (Applause and laughter.)

Mr. Cockran then went on to criti-ise the reports of the minority of the committee on ways and means; and in connection with one of its propositions, as to the competition between Amerias to the competition between American labor and the unskilled labor of other countries, said: "Sir, barbarism has prevailed against civilization, when barbarism used the weapon of brute the barbarism used the weapon of brute the said: "Sir, barbarism to be the weapon of brute the said: "Sir, barbarism to be the said force: but in economic contests, the higher the level of civilization the more Farine. Spices of all kinds, and a select stock higher the level of civilization the more sure the result of the contest. And because we, in this country, are the because we, in this country, are the most civilized people that the world has even seen, because we have reach.

Wholesale and Retail Deale ed the highest level of civilization of which the human mind ever dreamed, we are for that reason, and for that reason only, charged with the high purpose of effecting the industrial and economical conquest of the whole world." Quoting approvingly a sentence from David Hume, Mr. Cockran

"Like him, I pray for the commercial | 11. success and prosperity of the sons of men, wherever they are. I believe that the children of Adam, whom Christ died to save, are all our brethren and that the mission of this republic is to elevate all of them.

Mr. Cockran continued: "As the chairman of the committee on ways and means, the gentleman from West Virginia (Mr. Wilson) has stood here in the House and launched the tariff bill its successful voyage; as he stood here and withstood the angry protests of some men in his own State, some of whom added threats to remonstrances, certainly we, who have less to lose, can do the same." The Wilson bill, he added, was a step in the direction of economic reform and commercial freedom of the country.

"Let us pass this bill," he continued, "and I promise you that it will take more than six months of hard times to put soup kitchens in every city (ap-plause). Mr. Wilson told us, in words which will last long after he has disappeared from this scene of his activity. which he has done so much to adorn he has told us that the prosperity of this country depends not on the tariff, but on its labor; not its mines, but on its men; not on the republican party, but on the republican party, attended to, at H. W. WILDT'S, but on Almighty God." (Loud ap-
